Italy also produces a variety of Chardonnay lighter, leaner and crisper than that cultivated in other parts of the world. From the uncomplicated crispness of the inexpensive blends to the rich, full textures of pricier bottles, most Italian whites are well-paired with Italian foods, light, simple dishes like roasted chicken, uncomplicated seafood combinations and green salads.

BAROLO

Many view the Barolo as the "King" of Italian wines. The Barolo DOCG area lies just southwest of Alba around the towns of Barolo, Castiglione Falletto, Serralunga d'Alba, Monforte d'Alba, and La Morra. It's one of the small number of DOCG areas in Italy, sharing this status in northwestern Italy's Piedmont region with Barbaresco. Like the Barbaresco DOCG, the grape used here is the Nebbiolo. DOCG rules require Barolo wines to age for a minimum of 3 years, two of which must be in wooden barrels. Riserva wines require 4 years.

VENETO "AMARONE"

Amarone is a rich Italian dry red wine made from the partially dried grapes of the Corvina-Rondinella and Molinara. The length of the drying process is typically 120 days but varies according to producer and the quality of the harvest. The most evident consequence of this process is the loss of weight: 35 to 45% for Corvina grapes, 30 to 40% for Molinara and 27 to 40% for Rondinella. Following drying, end of January/beginning of February, the grapes are crushed and go through a dry low temperature fermentation process which can last up to 30/50 days. After fermentation, the wine is then aged in barriques made from either French, Slovenian or Slovenian oak.

BOLGHERI

It is not just a question of varieties: it is the "terroir" that has made this area the great birth place for the Super Tuscan wines.

The beginning of the Super Tuscans

The elders in this area used to say that you couldn't make great wines close to the sea. Today, it has been shown that vicinity to the sea is precisely what makes great wines. The highest-quality vineyards are all at the feet of the hills and in the plane between Bolgheri and the southern part of Castagneto.

It all started immediately after World War Two thanks to a brilliant intuition of the marquis Mario Incisa della Rocchetta who gave start, with his picks, to the production of those wines then renamed Super Tuscans.

Already in 1944 the Marquis planted approximately one hectare of Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc at Castiglioncello di Bolgheri, within the borders of the San Guido estate. Starting in the 1970s, Sassicaia became a true legend, one of the best Italian wines for aging, able to astonish you after a long stay in the bottle. Sassicaia is today among the most famous wines in the world, but it is not the only one. Starting already in the 1980s, other producers, who are also well known today, joined the bet to prove that the entire territory, and not just one wine, is "great."

Guado Al Tasso, Antinori 2021

The nose is very refined and elegant, with fragrant, sweet aromas. The aromas are well integrated, with harmony between the fruity and balsamic notes. Ca'marcanda Bolgheri, Gaja 2021

The tricky growing season seems to have been less of an issue for the Merlot, particularly in the old-vine Castello D'Ama vineyard. TUSCANY

Chianti Classico D.O.C.G & Riserva

Chianti is a large region that produces a wide range of styles. From the basic Chianti to the finest Chianti Classico Riservas, some elements of the wines remain consistent. The wines are based on the Sangiovese grape, which typically yields a medium-bodied wine with strawberry and cherry fruits that are accented with delicate notes of green herb, dusty soil, leather and spice. While Chianti can be produced exclusively from Sangiovese, the vast majority of Chianti is blended with a small percentage of other grapes. Traditional grapes like Mammolo, Colorino, and Canaiolo were used to add some flesh and aromatic complexity to the finished wine but always played second fiddle to Sangiovese. Many producers now include some Merlot, adding fruit and richness, or Cabernet Sauvignon, which contributes power and dark fruit flavors.

The history of Brunello counts about 150 years, the beginning of it was put by Ferruccio Biondi-Santi and his experiments with the Sangiovese grape in the 70s of the 19th century. Since then the demand for this wine and its reputation have been invariably growing. Brunello di Montalcino, which is made of 100% Sangiovese grapes, is aged for 3 years in large Slavonian oak kegs for your little oak flavor although some wine-makers use small French barrique for. Brunello di Montalcino wine-makers use 2 kinds of bottling: riserva and normale. Normal bottles are offered towards the market after 50 several weeks while riserva bottles are

CABERNET SAUVIGNON

Like most wines, the key to matching Cabernet is the acidity of the wine. A young boisterous Cabernet that has little or no oak aging retains the fresh acidity of the grape, and goes well with a surprising range of foods. Older Cabernets that have spent some time in oak and in the bottle have a deep ripe maturity and hopefully an intensity of flavour that should be allowed to shine on its own.

FRANCE

France is arguably the world's most important wine-producing country. For centuries it has produced wine in greater quantity – and many would suggest greater quality – than any other. Wine is historically ingrained in French culture at almost every level of society; it is the drink of royalty and a key symbol in Roman Catholicism, France's majority religion.

France's appellation system was created in the early 20th century and has since been imitated in many countries around the world. This complex system of laws ultimately defines each wine region and its boundaries, and imposes strict rules around winemaking practices. Protecting the names of French wines and guaranteeing the quality and provenance of the products themselves are its key objectives. No other country has developed its appellation system to such an extent; as of 2010, there were more than 450 controlled appellations under the AOC and VDQS titles, and a further 150 Vin de Pays titles.
